the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million (1990-2000) (ONS 2001).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health care needs of the elderly population. The Department of Health (2000) has set out a strategy for the NHS to meet the needs of the elderly population. This strategy is based on the following principles:

- To ensure that the NHS is able to meet the needs of the elderly population.
- To ensure that the NHS is able to provide a high quality of care for the elderly population.
- To ensure that the NHS is able to provide a range of services to meet the needs of the elderly population.

The NHS is currently facing a number of challenges in meeting these objectives. These challenges include:

- A growing elderly population.
- A growing number of people with long-term conditions.
- A growing number of people with mental health problems.
- A growing number of people with learning disabilities.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people in the UK. The Department of Health (2000) has published a strategy for older people, which sets out a vision for the future of health care for older people. The strategy is based on the following principles:

- Older people should be able to live independently and actively in their own homes.
- Older people should be able to access the services they need to live well.
- Older people should be able to participate in decisions about their care.
- Older people should be able to live in a safe and secure environment.

The strategy also sets out a number of key objectives for the future of health care for older people, including:

- To reduce the number of older people who are admitted to hospital.
- To reduce the length of stay of older people in hospital.
- To reduce the number of older people who are admitted to care homes.
- To reduce the number of older people who are admitted to residential care.

The strategy also sets out a number of key actions for the future of health care for older people, including:

- To improve the quality of care for older people.
- To improve the safety of care for older people.
- To improve the access to care for older people.
- To improve the experience of care for older people.

The strategy also sets out a number of key challenges for the future of health care for older people, including:

- The need to address the needs of older people who are living in poverty.
- The need to address the needs of older people who are living with long-term conditions.
- The need to address the needs of older people who are living with mental health problems.
- The need to address the needs of older people who are living with dementia.

The strategy also sets out a number of key messages for the future of health care for older people, including:

- Older people are a diverse group of people.
- Older people should be able to live well.
- Older people should be able to participate in decisions about their care.
- Older people should be able to live in a safe and secure environment.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the UK Government has set out a strategy for the 21st century (Department of Health 1999). This strategy is based on the concept of 'active ageing', which is defined as 'the process of optimising opportunities for health, participation in society, and security in old age' (Department of Health 1999, p. 1).

The strategy is based on three pillars: health, participation, and security. Health is defined as 'the state of being free from disease and disability, and having the ability to engage in activities that are meaningful and enjoyable' (Department of Health 1999, p. 1). Participation is defined as 'the ability to take part in the activities of everyday life, and to contribute to the community' (Department of Health 1999, p. 1). Security is defined as 'the ability to meet the needs of everyday life, and to have access to the resources and services that are needed to do so' (Department of Health 1999, p. 1).

The strategy is based on the principle that older people should be able to live independently and actively in their own homes, and to participate in the activities of everyday life. This requires a range of services and resources, including housing, transport, and social services. The strategy also emphasizes the importance of promoting the health and well-being of older people, and of providing them with the support and resources that they need to do so.

COMMENTS AND NOTES

the 1990s, the number of people with diabetes has increased in all industrialized countries. In the Netherlands, the prevalence of diabetes is estimated to be 10% in 2000, with a projected increase to 15% by 2010 (1). The prevalence of diabetes is also increasing in developing countries (2).

Diabetes is a chronic disease with a high prevalence and a high burden of complications. The most common complications are cardiovascular disease, nephropathy, retinopathy, and neuropathy. The complications of diabetes are the leading cause of blindness, kidney failure, and lower limb amputation (3). The economic burden of diabetes is also high, with direct and indirect costs of diabetes in the Netherlands estimated to be 1.5 billion Dutch guilders in 1998 (4).

The management of diabetes is a complex task, involving the control of blood glucose levels, blood pressure, and lipids. The management of diabetes is also a long-term task, as diabetes is a chronic disease. The management of diabetes is also a multidisciplinary task, involving the patient, the general practitioner, the endocrinologist, the dietitian, and the nurse. The management of diabetes is also a challenging task, as the patient has to live with a chronic disease for the rest of his or her life.

The management of diabetes is a complex task, involving the control of blood glucose levels, blood pressure, and lipids. The management of diabetes is also a long-term task, as diabetes is a chronic disease. The management of diabetes is also a multidisciplinary task, involving the patient, the general practitioner, the endocrinologist, the dietitian, and the nurse. The management of diabetes is also a challenging task, as the patient has to live with a chronic disease for the rest of his or her life.
