----- COMMENTS AND NOTES -----

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million (1990-2000) (ONS 2001).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health and social care needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2001) has set out a strategy for the UK, which includes a commitment to 'improve the health and well-being of older people, and to help them to live longer, healthier lives'. The strategy also includes a commitment to 'improve the quality of life of older people, and to help them to live longer, healthier lives'.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the Government has set out a strategy for doing so in the White Paper on Ageing Better: A New Vision for Older People (Department of Health 1999). This paper sets out the following objectives:

- (i) to ensure that older people are able to live independently and actively in their own homes;
- (ii) to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes and communities for as long as possible;
- (iii) to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes and communities with dignity and respect;
- (iv) to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes and communities with safety and security;
- (v) to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes and communities with choice and control.

COMMENTS AND NOTES

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion.

There are a number of reasons why the number of children in the world is expected to increase. One of the main reasons is the high birth rate in developing countries. In many of these countries, the birth rate is still high, and the death rate is falling, which is leading to a rapid increase in the number of children.

Another reason is the increasing life expectancy in many countries. As people live longer, the number of children who survive to adulthood is increasing. This is also leading to a higher number of children in the world.

There are also a number of other factors that are contributing to the increase in the number of children in the world. These include the increasing number of children who are being born to single parents, and the increasing number of children who are being born to parents who are themselves children.

The increase in the number of children in the world is a major challenge for the world's leaders. They need to find ways to provide for the needs of these children, and to ensure that they have a good quality of life.

One of the main ways to do this is to invest in education. Education is the key to a better future for children, and it is essential that all children have access to a good quality of education.

Another way to do this is to invest in health care. Children need to be healthy and strong, and it is essential that they have access to a good quality of health care.

There are also a number of other ways to do this. These include investing in social services, and in the environment. All of these things are essential for a good quality of life for children.

The world's leaders need to work together to find ways to provide for the needs of children. They need to invest in education, health care, social services, and the environment. Only then can we ensure that all children have a good quality of life.

The number of children in the world is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion in the 1990s. This is a major challenge for the world's leaders, and they need to find ways to provide for the needs of these children.
