FINAL NOTICE

Permit#

MRE S2302-2022

This notice represents [Anyday Heating and Cooling's] attempt to complete the inspection process for your new HVAC equipment. If this inspection is not completed within 30 days of the receipt of this notice Harnett County will be notified and your permit will be null and voided.

The inspections department at Anyday heating and Cooling, has made numerous attempts to contact you.

Anyday heating and cooling is required by the state of North Carolina Licensing Board to submit a permit application at the start of each project. In your case, an application was submitted and approved; the above permit number was issued by Harnett County.

We understand that at times this process can seem overwhelming or become inconvenient, but at the same time you are strongly encouraged to participate in the inspections process. It is ultimately in your and your family's best interest to have the system inspected by your local inspections department. If your permit becomes null and void numerous things will happen, Failure to properly close a permit can be deemed a code violation by the local government, and can result in the imposition of a fine. The local government can also withhold new permits if the homeowner has open permits on the same property. Further, in the event that building codes have changed during the period between the issuance date of the permit and the date of inspection, the work may not pass inspection if it is not in compliance with the current building codes. If an owner waits months or years before scheduling the inspection to close a permit, and the building codes have changed, the owner may be forced to redo the work in accordance with the current building codes before the work may be inspected and the permit is closed. You will not be able to sale or close on your home and you could void your homeowners insurance.

Please call [Hannah at 919-329-2944] to schedule your inspection and reference your address.
